Dame Fortune is smiling on a Lubchuk man today. He stands at the Federal mine, and has drawn a horse, Can Can, in the Irish Sweep. He stands to cash in his ticket for $27,000. As it stands the cable received advising him of his good fortune states he would get between $2,000 and $3,000 to draw the horse.

The Cambridgeshire is run at Newmarket, October 28. His daughter, Mrs. W. E. Cooper, of Faith, Alta, had the thrill of opening the cablegram. The seller of the ticket, also a local mine employee, gets $100 for placing the lucky slip. The ticket is "HN 52037—Sunny Boy" on Can Can.

The World of Wheat

By H. G. L. Strange,
Director, Research Department,
Sears Grains Company, Ltd.

Wheat prices have bounded up.

Simply because the excess, or surplus world's surplus, has disappeared.—It has been eaten up!

So little bound up has been available to carry as has at last been lifted from the backs of Canadian farmers.

Before 1924 the world, with an average production and consumption of some 160 million bushels, had a surplus such as you, about 90 million bushels, but in 1925 many countries experienced an extraordinary yield to the acre, so the year-end surplus suddenly and greatly increased.

In this, during the years of depression, people ate less bread, all of which resulted in the 650 million bushels surplus growing by 1931 to the vast amount of 1,150 million bushels, or a surplus of 500 million bushels.

Now the world's demand has increased again, largely because of imports—The European crop is 6 per cent less than last year.

Factors depressing prices have been as follows: Latin America, Argentina, Australia, India, and other countries—Scarceable weather for fall sowing in Europe—European demand for wheat declining—Favorable conditions in the United States where wheat belt—Increased estimates Japanese rice and Chinese wheat crops.

Selecting Municipal Representation

With the near approach of the annual municipal elections in urban centres and rural districts throughout the prairie provinces, the time has arrived when citizens might well devote some serious thought to the type of municipal government which should represent them in the local councils during the coming year.

At all times the question of the quality of representation on municipal councils is one of considerable importance, this year it is one of much magnitude, partly on account of the difficulties of local government occasioned by problems arising out of the depression and partly because of the restlessness of the changing times and changing viewpoints, particularly on some of the issues involved.

From small but wofeorous minorities one hears of suggestions and plans for changes which, if put into effect, might constitute a threat to the continued existence of democratic government in this country and there is always danger, under a democratic form of government, of minority groups attempting to gain their ends by casting their ballots on election day without the conduct of their own affairs.

For this reason, if nothing else, it is highly important that the citizens of this country take an active and intelligent interest in their own business—the business of government, whether it be in the local councils, the provincial legislature or the national parliament.

It is unfortunately the case that sometimes municipal election issues are decided by a comparatively small percentage of the electorate because so many refrain from going to the polls to express their desires through the ballot. If this results in the election of representatives unacceptable to the majority and the imposition of policies inimical to their interests those who have been casting their ballots on election day have no "come-back" and deserve none.

To many it may seem that local affairs are of little importance. They appear trivial when matched with provincial issues or Federal policies and this misapprehension sometimes leads to an attitude of nonchalance on the part of a section of the electorate.

On the contrary, however, it should be remembered that despite the fact that local municipal units are the creation and, therefore, the creatures of a superior government, nevertheless local self-government is the bulwark of the people and of all government, and with the extension of activities and authority imposed upon municipal councils in recent years is becoming increasingly important.

Not only that, but in many matters closely affecting the lives and welfare of the citizens of the country, the major governments have adopted the custom of seeking the advice and assistance of local municipal representatives in an increasingly large measure. They regard them, properly, as the mouthpiece of the district they serve and more often than not defer to their judgment.

For this reason, as well as the necessity of having men capable of administering local affairs wisely, it is highly important that the municipal electors use care and sound judgment in selecting the men who are to represent them in the councils, that all the electors participate in the function of casting the ballot and that once having made their selection the electors support their representatives as long as they prove worthy of the high trust imposed in them.

If the great majority of the electors take these duties seriously, less will be heard of trivial matters being injected into municipal election campaigns and municipal council debates and there is less likelihood that elected representatives will fail to appreciate the needs of organized minorities or other groups who, in their conscientious efforts to make proposals adverse to the interests of the great rank and file of the electorate.

One sometimes hears it stated that it is difficult or impossible to choose the best-fitted to accept nomination for public office. If that is so, it must largely be the fault of the percentage of the electorate who decline to take an active part in their local affairs, both in the matter of selecting candidates and in the matter of doing their duty in carrying out measures and policies for the benefit of the community as a whole.

Such comments are not, of course, applicable to all municipalities, and perhaps not even to a majority of them. In many cities, towns, villages and rural municipalities in the three prairie provinces, the electorate demonstrates a highly intelligent and active interest in its own affairs, and a sense of their business conducted wisely and well by capable men and men of integrity who justly command a respect and confidence which is not confined to the communities they serve.

Dog Solves Crimes

Does Valuable Work In Connection With Duties Of Mounted Police

"Dale," a big black and tan with a keen nose and a marked devotion to duty, is now a valued member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police established at Edmonton.

Dale is a dog who has done such remarkable work in solving a number of crimes in the Calgary district that he was given honorable mention in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police annual report, just off the press. It takes a full page in the report to describe the dog's exploits.

Here are a few of the cases in which Dale has worked. Simpson, two and a half years old, wandered away from her home. A search party failed to find her. Dale was called in and did.

Under difficult conditions, Dale located the dog and brought him to the master of Sergeant G. S. Wallace and Constable G. C. Harrison by Joe Ponikoff, Peter Wileman and John Kalmakoff, who were killed themselves in gun battles with the police.

Dale has also been known to cause an explosion in a farmer's house from a gasoline saturated suit of underwear found at the cellar door. The same farmer had lost two rolls of wire netting. Dale was taken to the place from which the netting had been taken, and when he was found, found the wire and led to the arrest and conviction of the thief.

But Dale is ornamental as well as useful.

He took first prize in his class at the Calgary dog show. And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

Supplies Reach Coppermine

Hudson's Bay Boat Gets Through The Ice After Difficulties

Religious activity which has lasted for months supplies have finally reached Coppermine, principal base in the Central Arctic, according to reports from Rev. E. J. Edwards. Blocked for weeks by heavy ice from the Arctic the schooner H. Hudson's Bay Company, carrying supplies to the trading posts, has finally made its way through the pack of the Coronation Gulf reaching Coppermine and is now frozen in at that point.

Owners of the schooner, Jack Lickert, Bill Stor, Art Watson and "Slim" Puryear have sent word that the ship is passing and a radio telegram reaches E. J. Edwards to this effect has reached Edmonton.

The other Hudson's Bay supply ship made Coppermine safely on October 6. Aboard her was Ray Ross, company post manager of Ross Island, and his bride, the former Miss Lillian Smith of Edmonton.

No Campaign Speeches

Alaskan Woman Is Elected By Visiting Women To Be World's First Legislator

Alaska's first female legislator, visiting Neil Hart, was elected without making a single campaign speech. The Seldovia woman's early campaign ignored both political practice and traditions of feminine talkativeness. She let her masculine opponents have their say, but when she took the stage, she overcame the district in an aeroplane, having heart to heart talks with individual voters and key persons in organizations. Her platform was based on popular broken issues: Abolition of fish traps; enactment of social security legislation; financial aid to prospectors; substantial bounties on predatory animals, and more and better airplane landing fields.

Such comments are not, of course, applicable to all municipalities, and perhaps not even to a majority of them. In many cities, towns, villages and rural municipalities in the three prairie provinces, the electorate demonstrates a highly intelligent and active interest in its own affairs, and a sense of their business conducted wisely and well by capable men and men of integrity who justly command a respect and confidence which is not confined to the communities they serve.

Letter Of Thanks

Mayor Of French City Voices Gratitude For Gift From Canadians

The pilgrim who came from Canada expressing their gratitude to the people of France for their gift of a silver chair to the Mayor of French City, Valenciennes, on November 11, 1918, in which the late Sergeant Hugh Cairns of the Battalion, Royal Canadian Dragoons, sat when he received the Victoria Cross.

The letter, voiced the gratitude of the city for the boundless energy of the operators of the hospital and the attack on Valenciennes on November 11, 1918, in which the late Sergeant Hugh Cairns of the Battalion, Royal Canadian Dragoons, sat when he received the Victoria Cross.

The day prior to the unveiling of the chair, the mayor dedicated a street to the memory of Hugh Cairns, and in the course of the ceremony Major G. H. Gilbert, M.C., Yorkton, Sask., on behalf of the 46th Battalion, presented to Mayor Millet the copy of the operation order.

In his letter the mayor said this document was now translated into French, and had been placed in the municipality "in order that the citizens of Valenciennes might know to whom they are indebted for their deliverance."

Substitute For Gasoline

Amateur Chemist Says Invention Will Benefit The World

An obscure Pittsburgh inventor and interior decorator, who likes to dabble in chemistry on the side, claims to have hit upon a secret formula from what he asserts he has developed a substitute for gasoline.

He believes his discovery, which has not yet been put on the market, or protected by patent, will "revolutionize the gasoline industry."

The amateur chemist is Paul J. Hoyer, and, as one example of the manner in which his "gas substitute" will benefit the world, says general use of his "gas" would greatly reduce the number of deaths from gasoline fumes poisoning.

In a recent demonstration of his discovery, Hoyer, accompanied by his attorney, A. F. Burkhardt, and a reporter drove a car with standard gasoline and the new gas and got miles to the gallon of ordinary gasoline, and one-tenth of a mile more on a gallon or what he said was his "gasoline substitute."

At the completion of the last demonstration, Hoyer declared:

"Well, as far as we are concerned, this new fuel is perfect."

A Precious Relic

Interesting History Of Coronation Chair At Westminster Abbey

While the work of preparing Westminster Abbey for the coronation of King George VI was proceeding, one important relic at the Abbey will undergo no renovation, the Coronation Chair, according to a writer in the Manchester Guardian.

Except for cleaning, it requires nothing done to it and it would not stand much. The famous stone of Scone—and it had a history in Ireland before it was taken to Scone—had a wide crack all but rent its solid mass asunder, and iron rings were driven through the stone to stop the age which has caused the wear and tear. Though every monarch since Edward I has been crowned on it, the use it has undergone on those occasions has not been negligible.

For a long period of its history it was very poorly looked after. Nearly everybody, it seems, was allowed to sit in it by permission of the attendants, or else did so on the sly. An inscription on it records the visit of King Edward VII in 1902. In 1902, it is illuminating. Peter Abbot went into the Abbey at night for a bet that he would carve his name on Purcell's monument. He did not succeed in doing it, but he did manage to engrave his name on the Coronation Chair.

The letter, voiced the gratitude of the city for the boundless energy of the operators of the hospital and the attack on Valenciennes on November 11, 1918, in which the late Sergeant Hugh Cairns of the Battalion, Royal Canadian Dragoons, sat when he received the Victoria Cross.

U.S. Naval Strength

America's Naval Fighting Power Has Been Reduced

An official report disclosed that America's naval fighting power had been reduced since July 1 while other major nations were increasing theirs.

The figures made public by the Navy department showed the United States, chiefly by scrapping old warships in accordance with provisions of the soon-to-expire London treaty, had cut its naval strength from 324 ships of 1,062,715 tons to 308 ships aggregating 1,062,873 tons.

Thou Shalt Not Love

A NOVEL BY —
GEORGIA GRAIG

"You cad!" Her eyes blazed with black rage. In that moment she was all fighting spirit. She struck him stingingly across his hard young face.

Then they were silent, their bodies tense with anger. Silent inches between them, and their faces glaring at each other, like two who have begun a feud to the death. The palms of the girl's fingers showed white against the man's tanned cheeks.

The thin hard line of his jaw marked his determination. He meant to win. He said, still with that harsh voice:

"Don't let you back out now! You've started this thing and you've got to go through with it. Do you suppose I'm going to allow you to make a fool of me before everybody?"

Star's throat was aching and burning, "I'm not going to anybody," he meant. Stephanie, of course. The hurt in her blue-eyed brows was all he cared about. This whole mad farce was being played for her—for Stephanie who had twice cruelly insulted Star! She bit her lip bitterly. "You don't care what would do to a woman do you? You don't care if the whole world thinks she's—a—she's—Oh, you know what they think?"

His lips curved contemptuously. "Getting rather particular all of a sudden, aren't you? It occurs to me you may not always be so careful of your spurious reputation." He laughed, with no trace of humor. "And you! I thought you wanted to play? You said so . . . I've raised your offer to a million dollars. Give a chance a million other girls might have jumped at! I've given you power—if you know how to use it!"

A curious feeling swept through Star. That was true. He had given her power, not a sort. But he had hidden it well, probably, not because of forbidden emotions. If she could only really be the hard, scintillating Michael he wanted to be!

It little while ago she had likened herself to a puppet dancing on the end of a string. It struck her now she could turn the tables if she chose. She could be the one handling the strings. She could make all these people dance for her; Stephanie, Lance Marlowe, even the thought of Michael. Especially Michael!

A savage joy shook her at the thought of making events even with Michael. In that moment, however, he had hinted him will bring him a present. She could have done credit to the daughters of the desert, of whom she was synthetically one, surged through her slightly body. Her smile flashed into his angry face. The mocking, pain-filled smile that was the trademark of the notorious "Play-Girl," the supposedly part-Egyptian whose heart it was to Michael.

"All right, Michael-Issum, I'll go through with it," she said. "I'll play! Through with it! I finished you off, so say that you made me!"

Star Ellison did not leave her bed party as Lance Marlowe had thought perhaps might be her intention. Instead she had joined the others gathered to do a curious sort of homage with new energy and particular excitement.

It was while the mermaids were at the height of their beauty performance when she dropped in to being surprised that it was not just another party thrown for a would-be celebrity that she sang for them all.

A song of Aragon, a desire to sing variety of songs, had been heard throughout the concourse of opinion was that it must be "one of those tribal songs that had come down through the centuries, my dear."

This particular song had as its author, Michael-Issum. Marlowe's penthouse apartment, although it might have been the penthouse of almost any of the dozen or more men present, so familiar was the gay setting. Stephanie Date was not there.

Stephanie had remarked quite de-lightedly with his filled tray among the laughing groups clustered around couches or in little bubbles around fireplace or piano, according to notion. In front of a buffet, two or three who had never seen the girl before gave gushing exhibitions of their prowess with the shaker. Some one fingered lightly over the keyboard in an impulsive medley of popular tunes.

Old by now, but they seemed to be in a fever of never lift to take breath, the mermaids had come as busy as huss with a tiny of little sandwiches, caviar and foie gras tidbits as the drink server. A typical Manhattan cocktail hour scene.

Here and There

Contending success has attended the publication of J. Murray Gibbon's book, "Seat of Empire," in which Gibbon has written a history of transportation in this country. The first edition of this comprehensive history of Canada's railroads and its work on Canadian history was sold early and another is now out in preparation for the Christmas gift market, for which it is anticipated there will be a heavy demand.

Effective January 1, 1937, contributions to the Canadian Legion campaign will replace the 23-year-old non-contributory system. Since the latter system has been in effect the Legion has paid out $18,201,640 in pensions. Under the new plan, officers and members will receive three per cent. of their wages or salaries. Pension rates will be unchanged, and the same rates will be used as heretofore.

Twenty-three arrivals from British and continental ports and twenty-three departures by Canadian Legion ships will constitute the passenger service from Saint John and Halifax during the coming winter season. It is anticipated that many Canadian Legion members will cruise.

John M. Irwin of Montreal has been awarded one of the Pan-Pacific Lemmy prizes for his book, "End ships—and sealing-wax." It was presented by the Quebec Provincial Secretary Paquette. The book, written during a year's vacation at sea in the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain, received the only English award in the Lemmy competition. "End ships—and sealing-wax" which is published in Canada and abroad, deals with the lighter side of cruising, and is a valuable, if informal, aid to world-wide seafarers.
